Ravi Pujari out of action, no extortion calls in two weeks

Usually 8 to 10 such calls a month, half from Pujari: Police

IN THE two weeks since the detention of gangster Ravi Pujari in Senegal, the Mumbai Police has not received a single complaint regarding an extortion call.

Senior officers said that currently, three to four extortion calls are received every fortnight from gangs on an average. The apparent lull in extortion since Pujari's detention on February 22, the police believe, is on account of the fact that Pujari accounted for nearly 50 per cent of Mumbai's extortion money pie. In addition, Pujari's neutralisation will change the way underworld gangs operate in the city, officers said.

A senior Crime Branch officer said, "Over the past two weeks, not one extortion call has been reported, which is unusual for the city, which sees around eight to 10 such calls in a month. This lull is most likely due to Ravi Pujari, a big player in the extortion business, being out of the picture. The other gangs would also want to see what changes this development brings and are cautious before they start making calls again."

An officer said that after Pujari, gangster Ejaz Lakdawala made the

Apart from Lakdawala, the police said that Ghatkopar-born Suresh Pujari, known to operate in Thane and beyond, is another gangster who has been in the police radar sporadically. Suresh Pujari, who has in the past worked with Ravi Pujari — the two are unrelated — in Mumbai, relocated his area of operation to Ulhasnagar after the Crime Branch began to go after him. In 2007, he fled India but continued making extortion calls. "Now that Ravi Pujari is out of the picture, Suresh may want a share of the pie," a senior officer said.

The police have also found gangster Prasad Pujari making threat calls in the city, albeit infrequently. Prasad, the police said, was an associate of gangster Kumar Pillai, who was extradited to India from Singapore in 2016. "Prasad restricts his operations to the eastern suburbs, especially the Vikhroli-Kanjurmarg belt, where Pillai was active at one time. Prasad until recently was functioning from Hong Kong," an officer said.

Officers said changes in the underworld are certain with the detention of Ravi Pujari. "Members of the Ravi Pujari gang would now be subsumed by some other gangs that may try to exploit the gap left by Pujari," a senior officer said.

EXPLAINED E. The first round of change

IN THE 1990s, when the underworld's shadow loomed large, even lavish weddings in Mumbai could attract the dreaded phone call from the D Company or Chhota Rajan. Since the mid 2000s, however, the stranglehold of the underworld over business in Mumbai reduced after the police went after it. Eventually, Rajan was deported to the city and it became too risky for Dawood Ibrahim to use his voice to make threat calls. The D Company also developed rifts, with the likes of Anees Ibrahim and Chhota Shakeel starting their own gangs. Officers said that these callers no longer use the name of Dawood to demand money.

CM-APPOINTED PANEL SAYS CAN'T FIND ALTERNATIVE HOUSING

Will continue to agitate for relocation: Mahul residents

EXPRESS NEWS SERVICE
MUMBAI, FEBRUARY 7

MAHUL RESIDENTS, who were told by a committee appointed by the Chief Minister that it cannot find alternative accommodation for them, have said they will continue to agitate till their demand of relocation is met.

The committee headed by Municipal Commissioner Ajoy Mehta had called a meeting on Wednesday with representatives of Mahul residents. Bilal Khan of Ghar Bachao Ghar Banao said no representatives from the Mumbai Metropolitan Region Development Authority, Maharashtra Housing and Area Development Authority (MHADA) and Slum Rehabilitation Authority attended the meeting. According to Khan, officials said they "forgot" to invite the agency representatives.

The meeting was held after the residents threatened to intensify their agitation against the "slow pace" of the committee formed with a promise from Chief Minister Devendra Fadnis to find a "quick" solution to the problem. On Wednesday, residents said they were shocked to learn that the committee has concluded that there is no solution, at least for now. "The commissioner read out the reports sent by all housing agencies. They mention there are vacant houses but those are reserved for people who will be afected by future projects. Our only hope was that we will get relocated to the 300 MHADA houses. But the commissioner refused to allot those till MHADA decides," Khan said. "The meeting was a big disappointment. Residents are facing slow death in Mahul due to high pollution and lack of basic infrastructure. Our fight will continue till the 5,000-odd residents get relocated to safer places. The issue needs to be resolved on an urgent basis," he added.
